What is the Primary Residential Exemption?

(§§ 59-2-103, 59-2-103.5 and R884-24P-52)

The primary residential exemption is a 45% property tax exemption on most homes in Utah. This means you only pay property taxes on 55% of your home's fair market value.

Eligibility

You may be eligible for the primary residential exemption if you occupy your home for 183 consecutive days or more in a calendar year.

The exemption applies to your house and up to one acre of land.

Apartments, condos and mobile homes also qualify. Up to one acre of land per residential unit qualifies for the primary residential exemption, IF used exclusively for residential purposes.

Properties inhabited by tenants also qualify, if they reside in the property for 183 consecutive days or more in a calendar year.

You must inform the county if you no longer qualify for the primary residential exemption.

Application

You likely already have the primary residential exemption applied to your property. Most homes that are used as residences and sold are presumed to continue as residences, so the primary residential exemption is ongoing without a new application.

Certain counties may require a new application (Form PT-23 or county equivalent) in certain circumstances. The Utah Code allows counties to pass an ordinance that requires an application should the property change ownership, change from a non-primary residence to a primary residence, or if the county reasonably believes the property may no longer qualify. Most often these counties require an application from the new owner when a home is bought and sold.

A homeowner should always submit an application to the county if they inhabit their property for less than the full calendar year.

KEY POINTS:

- The primary residential exemption is 45% of your home's fair market value.
- Some counties may require an Application for Residential Property Exemption (Form PT-23 or county equivalent) to receive the exemption.
- All other counties require a signed Residential Property Declaration (Form PT-19A) when title is transferred to a new owner.
- A homeowner should always submit an application to the county if they inhabit their property for less than the full calendar year.
- It is recommended to submit an application annually with current leases if your residential property is inhabited by a tenant.

DID YOU KNOW?

- A building that is under construction and intended to be used as a residential property upon completion can qualify for the primary residential exemption before it is completed. An application may be submitted to the County Assessor.
- You can confirm you receive the primary residential exemption by determining any difference between the market value and taxable value on your Valuation Notice (received around the end of July) or Tax Notice (received around the start of November). The taxable value will be 55% of the market value.
- Only one household may claim the exemption within the state of Utah. Married couples living apart cannot claim two exemptions. Unless couples have legally separated, they can only claim one exemption.
- The primary residential exemption has existed since 1982, and was raised to 45% in 1995.

Residential Property Declaration

Beginning 2019, if a county does not have an ordinance requiring an application for the primary residential exemption, a residential property declaration (Form PT-19A) is required when title changes on a home. New homeowners must submit a residential property declaration to the county assessor within 5 business days of title change.

This ensures all homes receiving the primary residential exemption genuinely qualify, and reduces the chance that out-of-state residents who own residential properties in Utah are incorrectly identified as domiciled in Utah for state income tax purposes.

In accordance with the provisions set forth under Utah State law, the Assessor's Office is required to verify and correctly classify all residential properties as a primary or secondary residence. State code 59-2-103 allows for a 45% residential exemption on primary residences in Utah. This means those receiving the exemption only pay property tax on 55% of the home's fair market value.

WHAT QUALIFIES A HOME AS A PRIMARY RESIDENCE IN UTAH?

Utah code defines a primary residence as a home that serves as the occupant's primary domicile for at least 183 consecutive days in a year. The owner, the owner's spouse, another family member, or a tenant may occupy the residence. A household may only claim one residential exemption in the State of Utah.

Please note: If a property owner or owner's spouse claims a residential exemption for property in Utah, that is the primary residence of the property owner or the owner's spouse, that claim of a residential exemption creates a rebuttable presumption that you are domiciled in Utah for income tax purposes. Simply, your worldwide income may be subject to Utah State income tax, unless established otherwise. This would primarily impact individuals who live out of state but claim their primary residence is in Utah. Individuals in such circumstances or believe they could be affected may wish to seek advice from an income tax professional.

HOW TO DETERMINE WHETHER OR NOT YOU ARE QUALIFIED FOR THE RESIDENTIAL EXEMPTION

WHAT IF A HOME QUALIFIES FOR THE RESIDENTIAL EXEMPTION BUT IS NOT RECEIVING IT?

If a qualifying property is not currently receiving the exemption, the owner will need to make application with the County Assessor. When applying for the primary residential exemption, you will be required to submit one of the following documents containing the physical address of the property in question as evidence:

- Driver's License (best option)
- Voter Registration Card
- Tax Returns

If the property in question is a rental, you will be required to submit a copy of the:

- Rental Agreement

All property owners must sign. This includes both spouses if the property is jointly owned by a married couple.

DEFINITIONS

A "household" means the association of individuals who live in the same dwelling, sharing its furnishings, facilities, accommodations, and expenses and includes married individuals, who are not legally separated, that have established domiciles at separate locations within the state. A household will only qualify for one residential exemption on an owner-occupied residence in Utah.

A "tenant" is a person who is not the owner, who occupies a property for at least 183 consecutive days per calendar year.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS?
